It plans the increase of the happiness, independence, usefulness and culture of every normal member in every rural community in the south. It plans the careful training of every individual, not only along school, special and rudimentary lines, but in everything for the strengthening of the effectiveness of his endeavors and the enrichment of his and his community's life. To add, if possible, to the interest and novelty of the project, it is proposed to accomplish this comprehensive education and material advancement of a nation of people through themselves. The educational method will be co-operation. The pedagogic masters of the community will be all of its members. The courses will be on material welfare, health, recreation and general culture. In short, the conference will propose for its task the most inclusive, yet definite, educational program of historic times. Nevertheless, the machinery by which the task is to be realized is simple and immediate.

The work of teaching the farmers of the south the advantages of the model munity will be done in two ways. There will be demonstrations and conferences of members. As the foundation of the community, the first demonstration will be that of the home. This will fall into several divisions. The best arrangement and equipment of the home will be demonstrated. Housing needs, cost, site, plans and construction will be handled. Installation of plumbing to the best sanitary advantage and the greatest convenience will be shown: also, the appliances and arrangement for the best lighting, heating, laundry and kitchen will be explained. Much attention will be given to a thorough treatment of laborsaving devices in the home.

The conference leaders confidently expect to convince the members that the overworked farmer's wife, the drudge whom rough and unremitting labor robs of comeliness and wider interests while still young in years, is inexcusable both to herself and to her husband in this late age. The members will be shown how special training and proper equipment shall enable the housewife to perform all her many duties well and still have plenty of time for recreation and mental growth ences of members. There will be several demonstrations for their study. A co-operative egg and poultry association will be organized. They will be shown how to administer its business, find their markets, grade and ship their products and the best appliances and methods for their individual guidance in poultry farming. In like way, co-operative associations for the growth and sale of vegetables and small fruits, farm produce, stock raising, breeding and marketing; a co-operative creamery to manufacture and sell dairy products, and a co-operative credit association will be organized. Co-operation in the purchase of supplies, seeds and machinery, and the co-operative prosecution of such community enterprises as the telephone and electric power will be explained. There will be demonstrations of scientific farm management and of the possibilities of the pareel post in aiding the farmer to participate direct in city markets. will be organized into a farmers'
